

On Day One, a graduate visits campus as part of his job

September 4, 2015

It is unusual for a college graduate to come back for a visit for the first day of classes. But that was exactly the case for SUNY Broome Communications graduate Scott Sasina (LACM '13), who came to campus Monday to film and report about the first day of classes in his capacity as a field reporter for WBNG TV News.

Sasina, from Endicott, transferred to the Communications program at SUNY Oswego, where he completed his 4-year degree in Broadcast Journalism in Spring 2015. He began working as a freelance journalist for WBNG in 2014, and in January of this year signed a contract with the TV station to work as a Multimedia Journalist.

"I go out, shoot my own footage, write my own stories, do live on-air reports and I anchor newscasts as needed," said Sasina.
